

G. Philip Matthews, Ph.D.

Class of 1974

He graduated cum laude with a B.S. in biochemistry from Moravian/Elmira College, then completed his postgraduate studies in molecular biology at the St. Louis University Medical Center. Also, he has completed fellowships and studies at the Medical College of Ohio, the Massachusetts Eye/Ear Infirmary at Harvard Medical School and Wilson Hospital in Johnson City. Dr. Matthews completed his residency in ophthalmology at New York Hospital-Cornell University Medical College, followed up with a clinical fellowship in retina/vitreous surgery in Washington D.C., and a research fellowship in pathophysiology at the National Eye Institute in Maryland. Currently, he is the Vitreoretinal Specialist for ECSC Retina II in Dallas, Texas, Adjunct Associate Professor of Ophthalmology, University North Texas Health Sciences Center, North Texas Eye Research Institute in Fort Worth, and a research consultant for Kestrel Corporation in Albuquerque, NM.