

Steven Tyrrell

Class of 1976

Integrity and commitment to public service are the hallmarks of Steven Tyrrell's career. From law clerk to federal prosecutor to the current Chief of the Fraud Section of the U.S. Justice Department's Criminal Division, he has vigorously upheld the tenets of our society's legal system.

As a federal prosecutor in Miami, Mr. Tyrrell worked some of the most complex narcotics, money-laundering, corruption and fraud cases in the country. For his work on a number of high profile Medicare fraud prosecutions, including what was the largest home health care fraud case ever brought at that time; Mr. Tyrrell received the Department of Health and Human Services Inspector General's Integrity Award.

Prior to serving in his current capacity as Chief of the Fraud Section, Mr. Tyrrell was the Deputy Chief of the Counterterrorism Section of the Justice Department's Criminal Division. In that role, he supervised a group of attorneys and coordinated al Qaeda-related investigations and prosecutions throughout the U.S. In 2005, he was again honored with the U.S. Attorney General's Award for Distinguished Service as a result of his work on the 2004 Terrorist Threat Task Force.

In his current position, Mr. Tyrrell oversees the work of approximately 60 attorneys and 30 support personnel to prosecute federal fraud cases, including those involving foreign bribery, corporate and securities fraud, health care and Medicare fraud, bank and mortgage fraud, identity theft and mass marketing fraud.

Mr. Tyrrell lives in Vienna, Virginia, with his wife, Connie, and their two children, Sean and Lindsey.
